Commencement, 1976

The ubiquitous mortar board was given identifying flourishes by 1976 graduates who added flags and taped messages to their caps at Commencement.

Commencement 1976 reflected a new generation of graduates which turned out for the ceremony in proportionately higher numbers than in recent years. But individuality was apparent. Many seniors overcame the traditional anonymity of the black cap and gown with inventive additions. Taped initials and messages, flags — both flat and flying — and balloons — attached or floating — festooned the mortar boards.

One row of graduates identified themselves in a series of mortar boards with letters spelling THE POST!

Enthusiasm for the day also was evident in the applause which twice interrupted Commencement Speaker Jacqueline Wexler, the president of Hunter College of the City University of New York (see page 6).

Approximately 1,350 students participated in the annual June commencement at which 3,710 degrees were formally awarded to students who completed their academic work at the end of the summer and fall quarters in 1975 and the winter and spring quarters in 1976.

Of the degrees awarded for all four quarters, 2,853 were the bachelor's degree and 164 the two-year associate degree. At the graduate level, 605 master's and 108 doctoral degrees were awarded.

The commencement also was the occasion for the conferral of four Ohio University honorary doctorates. Receiving the honorary degrees were Mrs. Wexler and three alumni, two from the Class of 1926. Recipients Mrs. Helen Robinson Jobe and Dwight Rutherford are featured in personal sketches in the Class Notes section of this issue on pages 11 and 12.

The third alumnus to receive an honorary degree was Dean Jeffers '36 (left), who is the general chairman of the Nationwide Insurance organization. He previously was featured in a sketch in the November-December 1975 issue of the Journal.

On the Cover

The proof is on the proofsheets: In a series of shots sure to evoke memories, 1976 prospective graduates are shown hurrying toward the Convocation Center, academic robes already on or in hand, to be counted among the more than 1,300 individuals who received diplomas at the June 12 commencement.

In This Issue

In the adjoining columns, the Journal reviews some of the newsworthy facts surrounding commencement, while on pages 6 and 7 are printed some of the thoughts expressed in the graduation address given by Jacqueline Wexler, president of Hunter College.

Covered in other articles are the coming to campus of National Public Radio's All Things Considered and the commissioning by the Ohio Valley Summer Theater of a Bicentennial historical drama, Heroes, for its 1976 season.

University Update

The University's College of Osteopathic Medicine announced in June the selection of its inaugural class to be admitted in September.

The 17 men and seven women in the class represent 13 counties within Ohio as well as Michigan and New York. The college had selected the class members from 100 individuals who received extensive interviews out of 283 final applicants.

The first two years of their four-year course of study will be centered on the main campus in Grosvenor Hall, which has been remodeled from a dormitory to a classroom building. During the third and fourth years, the students will receive varied clinical training in family practice and general medicine at various general and community hospitals, rural clinics, and physicians' offices throughout the state.

For the first time in history, the campus's all-male and all-female honoraries initiated students of both sexes spring quarter.

The membership change was required under the new guidelines for Title IX of the Higher Education Amendments of 1972. The federal legislation is designed to eliminate sex discrimination in both public schools and universities.

Groups affected by the new guidelines include Mortar Board and Omicron Delta Kappa for seniors, Chimes and J-Club for juniors and Alpha Lambda Delta and Phi Eta Sigma for freshmen.

The Department of Defense has rescinded its earlier action disestablishing the Army ROTC unit on campus.

The decision was made because the ROTC program at OU will be the site of a pilot program for leadership training for enrollees in the Ohio National Guard. Originally proposed by the guard, the program will offer partial tuition grants at OU as incentives for people to enlist or re-enlist in the Ohio guard. Guard members chosen will have to participate in ROTC while on campus.

In the meantime, the OU Army ROTC unit will remain on evaluation status for two years during which the unit will try to bring up its enrollment to required levels.

One of the University graduates participating in commencement ceremonies June 12 was Donnell Hayes, an inmate at the Chillicothe Correctional Institute who earned an associate of arts degree by correspondence.

The following week, the same degree was awarded to Richard Speakman, an inmate of Ohio's maximum security prison at Lucasville.

The two men are the first of the 200 inmates at five prisons enrolled in correspondence study to earn enough credits for degrees.

The University reported a new dollar record for the second year in a row in external support coming to the University for research.

The University received $1,377,409 in new, renewal or supplemental grants.

The first Robert L. Coe Memorial Scholarship for outstanding achievement in broadcasting history, management or engineering was awarded to Fred Wright, a senior in radio-TV.

The scholarship was established following Mr. Coe's death last November. He had taught at the University for five years after retiring from a vice presidency of the ABC Television Network. Upon his retirement from the University, he was named a professor emeritus of radio-television.

Alumni wishing to contribute to the scholarship fund may do so by sending checks to the OU Fund, Inc., office in Lindley Hall, designating the money to the Coe Memorial Scholarship.

I think you will be interested to learn of two new University programs that illustrate a number of trends in higher education. One of these is the movement by four-year institutions to build onto the offerings of two-year technical institutes and community colleges. Another is the creation of programs for students outside the traditional 18-22 year old group and for those already on the job.

The forensic chemistry program, which was initiated spring quarter, is a four-year program leading to a bachelor's degree, but was built to dovetail with the training received by graduates of two-year programs in criminalistics and law enforcement.

Designed for students interested in the application of chemistry and allied sciences to criminal investigation, it is the only such four-year program in Ohio and one of 12 in the U.S.

In the 1976 winter quarter, a bachelor of criminal justice program was formally instituted. It was designed to link up with two-year law enforcement applied science degree programs offered by two-year institutions throughout Southeastern Ohio. It has also proven of interest to those in the criminal justice field as a way of getting in-service training.

Like the forensic chemistry program, it employs an interdisciplinary approach and feeds graduates into areas with excellent job prospects.

Forensics chemistry and criminal justice joined a highly successful nursing curriculum as the University's three newest baccalaureate programs. In addition, numerous link programs leading to bachelor's degrees in long-established areas have been tailored for two-year institutions.

As alumni, we can be proud that OU has been recognized by the Board of Regents as the pioneer in developing such programs.

gram which would enable you as an investor to:

1. Enjoy a lifetime income from your investment.
2. Protect income for the life of your spouse.
3. Avoid capital gains tax if your investment is made with appreciated securities or property held longer than six months.
4. Receive an investment income which possibly could be greater than current investment yield.
5. Increase current year spendable income by means of an immediate tax deduction from 1976 taxes.
6. Assist future educational programs at Ohio University while enjoying all these benefits.—

Would you be interested?

The trustees of the Ohio University Fund, Inc., think you would also. Due to the excellent opportunities available through the enactment by Congress of the 1969 Tax Reform Bill, the OU Fund, Inc., "Pooled Income Fund" was created and approved by the trustees at their meeting June 11, 1976.

Some weeks earlier through our financial agent, First Trust Co. of Ohio, sample contracts and trust documents were submitted to the Internal Revenue Service for approval. Such an approval has been received and filed which qualifies a donor's investment gift for tax deduction on the remainder value as computed by IRS tables using a donor's age and the pooled fund rate of return.

Examples would be: A male, age 65, contributing $10,000 to the Pooled Income Fund at six per cent would have an immediate charitable deduction of approximately $5,180; a female of the same age would have a charitable deduction of $4,420.

What is a life income contract through a pooled fund?

In exchange for your gift of money or securities, we sign a legal contract to pay you an annual income for your lifetime. The gifts become the absolute property of the OU Fund, Inc., and thus qualify for the tax deduction.

Your gift is added to the "Pooled Fund," where it is invested with the gifts of others making similar life income gifts. You will receive, on a regular pay-out schedule, your share of the pooled income fund earnings. And each year a report will be prepared for you to assist you with your Federal Tax filing.

Other advantages of the pooled income fund include:

1. Management of your funds by experienced and competent investment counselors.
2. Diversification of your portfolio.
3. Distribution of your property as surely as through a Will, but with the privacy not available in the public probating of a Will.

How much may you invest?

There is no ceiling on the amount you may invest; however, the initial minimum is $2,500. Additional investments may be made in $1,000 increments as often as you desire.

For complete information:

Call or write me in care of The Ohio University Fund, Inc., P.O. Drawer 869, Athens, Ohio 45701. We can outline the particulars surrounding your contemplated gift if you furnish your birthdate (and that of a second beneficiary if you desire) and the amount you wish to invest.

We will also be pleased to discuss with you and your legal or financial counselor the best way to make your gift.

All Things Considered

For three days in early June, radio listeners all over the country heard a lot about Ohio University and Athens.

The occasion was the live broadcast from the WOUB radio studios of "All Things Considered," a news magazine which is aired daily from Washington, D.C. on National Public Radio (NPR).

The Peabody Award-winning program originated in part from Athens on June 7, 8 and 9, the dates having been chosen to coincide with the Ohio presidential primary.

Interspersed with the election coverage were interviews by co-host Bob Edwards and Capitol Hill correspondent Linda Wertheimer with OU professors and Athens area citizens who told the country about the politics, history, culture, and economics of the Southeastern Ohio region.

The invitation for ATC to come to Ohio University's Telecommunications Center for a few days of remote broadcasting was originally extended two years ago. During its five years on the air, ATC has only gone "on the road" about half a dozen times, so the WOUB staff sent occasional reminders to insure that next time a trip was planned, WOUB would be remembered as willing and able to accommodate the show.

The invitation was finally accepted when it became clear that Ohio was going to be a key state in the nation's presidential primaries.

Arriving at the University on the Wednesday before the Monday broadcast, Linda Wertheimer immediately began setting up contacts with the state's political leaders via telephone and quick trips to major cities.

In the meantime, Edwards was searching out local color stories with the help of WOUB staffers and an NPR reporter, Jeth Mill '69, who was a WOUB staffer before going to the Washington-based radio network. (Another graduate, Marti Griffin, '73, also is a reporter for ATC.)

Some of the pieces eventually used included interviews with sociology professor Bruce Ergood on the character of Appalachia; government instructor Jim Tilling on voting patterns in the state and region; former history professor Tom Smith (now head of the Ohio Historical Society) on Ohio history; and theater professor Robert Winters on the songs of the Appalachian Green Parks Project, a performing group which is an adjunct of the OU Theater Department.

Throughout all this production of segments for ATC, the WOUB staff worked to tighten the production schedule for its own programming so that ATC staffers had studio facilities available at the times they needed them.

The presence of ATC staff members had several benefits besides the obvious one of heightening knowledge of the region around the country. Telecommunications Center director

Joseph Welling noted in particular the opportunity afforded to the WOUB student staff to work with nationally-known professionals.

One student reporter got to accompany Miss Wertheimer as she followed the Carter campaign around Ohio. Other students were in charge of handling the technical end of the ATC broadcast. The Washington office later commended the students' efforts for broadcasts that were "technically flawless."

The experience has also given the WOUB staff new incentive to seek out regional stories that are of interest to listeners in other parts of the country. One of the virtues of "All Things Considered" is that unlike the other national news programs which emphasize major events in large cities, ATC relies on its 179 member stations for the important stories hidden in the nation's smaller communities.

The American Dilemma

Jacqueline Grennan Wexler, the president of Hunter College of the City University of New York, a school with an enrollment of 23,000, was the University's 1976 Commencement speaker.

One of a handful of women heading institutions with more than 10,000 students, Mrs. Wexler was awarded an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree prior to her speech.

In her remarks to the Class of 1976, their parents and friends, and University faculty and staff, she spoke of this Bicentennial year as an appropriate time "to take a brief look at what we no longer call the American dream but what is now called the American experiment—or perhaps even better—the American dilemma or paradox."

This dilemma has its base in the tension between two important strains rooted in American life: the desire to protect individual freedoms such as free speech, free thought, and free enterprise, and the need for social responsibility.

She pointed out that such deep-rooted strains as free speech and free enterprise depend on a kind of laissez faire, while social responsibility calls for an equally important good, "the need for all citizens to be protected from any who would attempt to use the rest of the human race as puppets."

Through its 200 years the United States, according to Mrs. Wexler, has been trying to balance and rebalance these two very important goods—interdependence and interdependence. The struggle forms the paradox that "we live in a kind of independent, separate, yet interconnected dependence on one another."

She noted that American history is the account of the struggle to balance freedom and social responsibility from the Civil War through the Great Depression, through the growth of Big Business and Big Labor, right down to the current question of how to handle the need for new energy sources and solve the problems surrounding the use of atomic power.

As has been true with other issues, she said, this last issue too will be resolved through reliance on "the statistical wisdom of the full electorate of our country, but only if we understand how ambiguous are the issues and that neither the slogans of the oil companies nor of the consumer advocates alone will solve the problem."

She asked the graduating seniors to have "a great trust in the nation" and to understand the need for a reasonable amount of regulation in our society. She stressed especially the necessity of preserving free speech from the onslaughts of "yelling demagogues of any ideological slant, whether left or right."

"I ask you, the first generation after the most terrible cynicism that—with reason—ever hit the student world," she continued, "to have the courage, hope and grace to trust in governmental leaders, in intellectual leaders and in experts in all parts of our society." But she added that that trust must never be complete trust; it must be "tempered by a sense of the limitedness inherent in all people and by a sense of humor."

She noted that the education the seniors had received at the University had been both formal and informal and voiced the hope that the valuable insights gained from "kitchen table seminars" with their parents and grandparents would remain important to them.

She said it was necessary to keep intellectual vitality alive through the discovery and rediscovery of the insights of those who had gone before us and through a respect for intellectuality and rationalism, but not for academicalism:

"There are academics who are intellectually alive and there are plumbers and farmers who are intellectually alive," she said. "They are the people who respect ambiguity, who know there are no simple answers. They are the people willing to commit themselves to others, willing to pledge themselves, recognizing that at the national, the institutional, and the personal levels we are interdependent."

She noted that those who think freedom is—in the words of preceding college generations—"always being able to do your own thing," will learn that that route can become a kind of "existential hell; for whatever hell is, symbolic or otherwise, it is loneliness, and existential nondependence on anyone else is loneliness."

Mrs. Wexler also spoke of the situation facing New York City as another example of the need to recognize the interdependence of units within the nation:

"Our grandfathers' grandfathers, when New York was a rich city with a great tax base, knew that to provide public education and close-to-full tuition scholarships was the way to take privilege away from those who held most of it."

Noting that because the social welfare system had not had incorporated within it at all points the requisite individual responsibility, it had become necessary to retract part of that system,

"But," she said, "it must never be allowed to go back to a laissez faire system that takes care of only one segment of society. Now a national system must redeploy the concerns of society and solve the most important issues facing all of us—higher education, health care delivery, and income assistance. And in doing so, the balance must again be drawn between individual freedom and social interdependence."

Concluding her speech, she asked that the graduates seek creative compromise in their lives and refuse to sell out to any one idea or program.

"If you believe that you are a finite human being, you will always be modifying, editing out, adding on. You will respect your roots, you will have reverence for the world, for those who went before you, and for yourself. Above all, you will maintain your sense of humor and be willing to acknowledge your own limitedness."

OVST Presents Heroes

Most people think the American Revolution started with the battle of Lexington and Concord. But some historians claim it really began in Athens County, Ohio.

This bit of little known history is being portrayed on campus this summer in a Bicentennial play, Heroes, commissioned especially for the Ohio Valley Summer Theater.

Written by free-lance theater critic Dennis Brown and directed by Dennis Dalen, OU associate professor of theater, Heroes is set in the context of Lord Dunmore's war against the Indians in Ohio, the Battle of Point Pleasant and the Ft. Gower Resolves.

Dunmore, the royal governor of Virginia, led the first colonial army to the Ohio Territory in 1774. He had ordered Col. Andrew Lewis to take the Southern Division overland to join his army at the Kanawha and Ohio rivers at what is now Point Pleasant, W. Va.

Dunmore's forces camped instead 30 miles away at Ft. Gower on the Ohio side of the Ohio River. Lewis' army, alone at Point Pleasant, was attacked Oct. 10, 1774, by the Shawnees under the legendary Chief Cornstalk. The colonists won the 10-hour battle and a treaty ending the war was negotiated several days later by Dunmore.

However, because the Indians and British were believed to be allies, the Battle of Point Pleasant is considered by some historians to be the first Revolutionary War battle. Dunmore is suspected of provoking it to distract the colonists' attention and divert their criticism from the royal government.

The site of Ft. Gower, built in 1774, is indicated by a marker at Hockingport at the confluence of the Hocking and Ohio rivers at the edge of Athens County. A recent archeological expedition, however, has placed the actual site of the fort on the bed of the Ohio River, now wider because of the many dams.

The significance of Ft. Gower lies in the declared dedication of the colonial army to the protection of American liberty two years before the Declaration of Independence.

The resolutions, drawn up there on Nov. 5, 1774, by the officers of Lord Dunmore's militia, pledged allegiance to England's King George III as long as his subjects remained free, but emphasized that American freedom would come before personal safety if they were called to defend that liberty.

Characters in the play include Dunmore, George Rogers Clark, Chief Cornstalk, and Thomas Jefferson, who followed Dunmore as governor of Virginia. The events provide the framework for the play, but the focus is on the men involved and on their values of patriotism, loyalty and authority.

The play was commissioned by the summer theater with support of the Athens County Bicentennial Commission, and the Ohio American Revolution Bicentennial Advisory Commission.

Sports Roundup

Booster Club Raises $45,000 for Sports

The most successful athletic fundraising drive in school history has added $45,000 to the coffers of the Athletic Department.

Athletic Director Bill Rohr said the six-week drive "has met our most crucial immediate needs for recruiting money, transportation and student help."

The Green and White Club, which spearheaded the drive, had hoped to raise $75,000, but Rohr said, "Overall, I'm pleased. We so very deeply appreciate all those who helped."

OU Infielder Drafted

Ohio junior Les Ream was drafted in the late rounds of June's annual free agent baseball draft by the San Francisco Giants.

The 5-foot-9, 165-pound infielder helped the Bobcats to a second-place Mid-American Conference finish this year.

Four former Bobcats are in the major leagues, including Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia and Steve Swisher of Chicago, who were named to the National League's All-Star team.

Alumni Stopped Twice

Alumni squads in soccer and lacrosse lost exhibition games to their Bobcat counterparts during spring quarter.

In soccer, the alumni fell 3-2. In lacrosse, the alumni lost 9-4.

Ex-Bobcat Star Hired

Sue Roberts, 23, a standout in women's basketball and field hockey at Ohio, has been named head coach of those sports at Davidson College.

The 1975 graduate recently received a master's degree from the University of Arizona, where she was an assistant basketball coach.

Hall of Fame To Induct 5 Alumni This Fall

Ohio's Athletic Hall of Fame will open its doors to five new members Homecoming Weekend, Oct. 23.

The inductees are Bob Bertelsen '71, John Frick '66, Dick Murphy '55, Larry Snyder '60 and Neil Wade '70.

Bertelsen, a two-time All-America, won the national championship in the six-mile run in 1969. He lives in Knoxville, Tenn.

Frick helped Ohio to a 1964 football championship and was an Associated Press second-team All-America. He resides in Springdale.

Murphy, a Cincinnati resident, is the school's only two-time first-team All-America in baseball. He also earned letters in basketball.

Snyder, now living in Midland, Tex., helped the 'Cats to golf championships in 1958, 1959 and 1960. His 29 for nine holes at the Athens Country Club shares the course record.

Wade was one of the first collegiate swimmers to break a minute in the 100-yard breaststroke. He lives in Euclid.

Football Team May Retain Division I Status

Ohio will retain its major college status in football if the National Collegiate Athletic Association approves recommendations made by its classification committee.

In an attempt to more equitably split up its 466 football-playing institutions, the NCAA tentatively has created four divisions for football—one more than it now has—beginning with the 1977 season.

Currently, 138 schools compete in Division I, including all members of the Mid-American Conference. Under the proposed realignment, some schools would move to a lower classification.

In the MAC, for instance, Bowling Green, Kent State, Miami, Toledo and Western Michigan would join Ohio in Division I. Other MAC schools would be placed in the newly created Division IA.

The proposed reclassification—to be voted on next January—has met opposition from critics who contend the 97 schools assigned to the new Division I are too many to make realignment meaningful.

Ohio, for instance, would become a member of a division so diversified that it would include schools ranging from super powers like Ohio State to schools such as Wichita State.

Hockey Game Nov. 6

The alumni hockey game will be played at 7 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 6.

Former players, managers and trainers will be mailed information about the weekend.

Coordinating the activities will be Mike L'Heureux, Box 5, Athens, Ohio 45701.
